It is employed when study animals are born in greater or lesser numbers of one or the other sex, or more often a mixture of the two. Other than the trivial case of an all female population, sex ratio variations are caused by the effort of parents to allocate more males to the offspring or, in the case of hermaphrodites, to allocate a greater proportion of the reproductive material to one sex.Effects of continuous or intermittent methotrexate administration during the late gestation period in rats. Maternal and fetal effects of methotrexate (MTX) was investigated to determine the effect on the conceptus. The dose response was determined by assessing the weight, protein and DNA contents of the uterine epithelium and endometrium at 16th gestational day. Liver, heart, kidneys and brain were also taken and examined to determine if systemic toxicity had occurred. Pregnant rats were dosed subcutaneously on the 16th gestational day. The dose-response study showed that doses over 100 mg/kg body weight (bw) resulted in no significant fetal growth reduction and up to 50 mg/kg bw resulted in increased growth and macerated fetuses. MTX dosed 50 mg/kg body weight during the preimplantation period or 75 mg/kg body weight during the postimplantation period of pregnancy produced hyperplastic endometrium and uterus with increased protein and DNA contents while 100 mg/kg
